The POLICE were founded by drummer Stewart Copeland in early 1977, who was anxious to form a new three-piece group and join the London punk scene. Stewart invited guitarist Henri Padovni and singer-bassist Sting.

They began to repeat in January and they recorded their first single, influenced by punk music 'Fall out' / 'Nothing Achieving', the following month.

Despite a difficult begin, without any money and recognition, they sold more than 100000 albums. Andy Summers, who has already performed with the band during a concert in Paris, definitively joined the group in June and they began performing as a four-piece version of the Police. Padovani's relatively limited ability as a guitarist meant that he left the band and Summers took over sole guitar duties. This trio would endure for the rest of Police history.
